Pumpkin Tossing Group Catapults Students Into Higher Education

The American Chucker Trebuchet Team Creates Science and Engineering Scholarship

Dayton, Oh. (December 1, 2010) – The American Chucker Trebuchet Team, a nationally recognized professional pumpkin throwing organization, announces the American Chucker Endowment, its first scholarship for students pursuing a degree in engineering or science – made possible by Greene County Community Foundation. Southern Recipe, a pork rind leader produced by Rudolph Foods, has made the inaugural donation in honor of American Chucker's recent third place win at the 25th annual World Championship Punkin Chunkin. American Chucker is creating the scholarship to encourage further science and engineering education within the community.

The World Championship Punkin Chunkin championship, held each year in Nassau, Delaware, holds thirteen category competitions for both adults and children that support the importance of science and engineering in the community. This year's competition was featured on the Discovery Channel as well as Science Channel.

"The American Chucker team revolves around the fun of science and engineering – creating an endowment fund is a natural and exciting step forward," says Steve Beyer, member of The American Chucker Trebuchet Team. "We're honored to have the support of Green County Community Foundation, Southern Recipe and the community overall."

"Education is an important cause to Southern Recipe and we're proud to assist American Chucker as their endowment fund takes off," says Mark Singleton, VP Marketing and Sales, Southern Recipe. "We're confident that this scholarship program will make significant contributions to the Ohio community for many years to come."
